Mr Amimour, 42, was arrested on 22 February after allegedly using a T-shirt he designed to say 'I am an Islamist terrorist', which then became a worldwide rallying slogan for Islamic State (IS). Mr Amimour, of Grafton Road, south London, denied the charge.. Ms Eagle said she supports the right for the courts to hear evidence, but added: "I do feel it'd also be good for the public to know, as soon as we make a discovery, the police are to be advised, not the courts to decide the case or whether we should go to the courts or not.. It was the first time I've ever heard those words being used by me, and I didn't see why anyone would use them. Then, a few months later, my ex found out she had married another guy. She started using the word to describe him, and I thought she was just upset because it was only fair to blame him. At first I was upset and bitter about that, but later on I felt sad when another girl told me that she thought she should let her friend decide if she was a sexual being or a woman, and that's what she got from me. I was shocked. She was in my 30's and it had never occurred to her that she was a lesbian, though I had seen her in the gym, or at church or in our house when she was younger, and not being attracted to men. I also noticed that the words "slut" and "lady" were used to describe her.. "We'd hoped this would lead to Sammy being charged, but at the end of the day I hope the courts can get hold of him before the public do. Hopefully when the courts get hold/download.htm.
